

01 / FRAME

Technical collaboration framework for agencies

Senior software development, white-label delivery and a clean exit.

A concise document to assess how Armando Bueno Ben can join a web, mobile, backend or integration delivery without changing the relationship between the agency and its client.

Four working conditions

Protected relationship I do not contact or solicit the end client outside the agreed frame. I can work visibly, discreetly or fully white-label.	Agreed ownership Repositories, access, code ownership, licences and publication are agreed before work starts.
Verifiable delivery Each milestone has a validation owner, acceptance conditions and a traceable decision record.	Clean exit Code, documentation, pending items and access are ready to maintain or transfer without artificial dependency.

How a delivery starts

- The agency shares the objective, timing, current state, validation owner and main blocker.
- We confirm fit, initial scope, channels, confidentiality, ownership and completion criteria.
- I work in the existing tools and report progress, risks and decisions at an agreed cadence.
- The delivery is accepted, documented and closed with included support or separately agreed continuity.

02 / DELIVERY

What an agency can buy

- A landing page, microsite or product frontend ready to publish and measure.
- Backend, API, CRM, automation or third-party system integration.
- App, SDK, mobile stabilization, pre-production QA and release support.
- Technical diagnostic, presales, scope review or milestone-based senior support.

Minimum brief for a first response

Objective What must be resolved or delivered.	Timing When it must be accepted or published.
Current state What exists today: design, code, API, environment or documentation.	Blocker Which technical or capacity risk is holding delivery back.
Acceptance Who validates the outcome and against which criteria.	Working frame Visible, discreet, white-label and/or NDA.

One verifiable public reference

The +DERA technical diagnostic for MaderaPlus left reproducible staging, app/backend/web testing and a prioritized roadmap.
